

Restarting India's Growth Engine

First,there is no need to re-invent the wheel.

A study of all the subjects handled by GOMs and eGOMs must be undertaken immediately and all efforts must be made to reach conclusions so that policies are announced and decisions declared. This itself will yield positive results.

The second area which needs to be addressed is the 'wall' and distrust between the Executive,Legislature and the Judiciary. The divide must be bridged so that issues pending in each of the 3 wings of governance of the nation cease to become bottlenecks.This is possible if 'mens rea' is absent.

Third,our political parties must realise that the nation is going downhill and only an 'all party' approach can repair the damage already done. Moral rectitude, Ethics,and National interest must be the bedrock of good governance.

In the nineties we succeeded in managing 'continuity with change'. In this decade let us manage 'austerity with growth'.

-----Ramesh Adige--Public Policy Expert June 29,2012 -----